

BNP CAUGHT OUT LYING IN QUEENSBURY

After having been rejected by the people of Eccleshill in Bradford in last year's elections, the parasites of the BNP are now turning their attention to Queensbury. They claim to be the party of law and order and they have even taken credit for the reopening of the police box on New Park Road.

Like most things the BNP say and do, they are lying.

Local people in Queensbury are worried about the level of crime in society. And who isn't? It is this concern which led many people to want more police on the street.

Last year the local Conservative Party pledged to reopen the police box on New Park Road and collected a big petition. They won.

Keen to jump on the back of somebody else's hard work, Paul Cromie, a local businessman, donated £1000 towards the station. When local councillors Michael Walls and Andrew Smith found out about Cromie's BNP connection they rightly refused his money.

The councillors did not want the money off a party whose leader denies the Holocaust and whose National Organiser who has a conviction for attempted bombing. In Yorkshire, the BNP is packed full of criminals and football hooligans. The BNP really are the party of convictions!

Time to get SERIOUS about crime

There is increasing fear of crime in West Yorkshire. This is a real fear. However two things should be kept in mind.

Firstly Bradford and Halifax are no worse than most urban areas – and arguably a lot safer, at present, than Leeds or other cities. Bradford gets in the news simply because of the racism and sensationalism of the mass media.

The statistics are hotly debated and difficult to interpret – but the worst we can say is that crime has increased a little over the past three or four years.

However, that is not the point. There is too much violence, anti-social behaviour and disruption to the lives of ordinary people and we should not put up with violent crime and anti-social behaviour in our area.

The BNP claim that black people, or Asian people, or asylum seekers (or whoever their current hate target is) are responsible for crime and violence. That is not true!

The facts show that there is one group overwhelmingly responsible for violence and anti-social behaviour – young men – young men of any and every colour.

Some young men have turned to the criminal economy. This is true of all communities – black and white, Muslim, Christian, whatever!

In fact, the BNP have in their ranks some of the most violent, anti-social young men to be found anywhere!

Bradford TUC stands for equality, civility and justice. We have spent much of the last thirty years speaking out against racist attacks on black and Asian people – and still do. However we are as aware as anybody of attacks on white people just because they're white – and we speak out against these too.

For example, in recent years a number of pubs have been firebombed. Sometimes this has happened during riots. More recently there have been isolated incidents where groups of youths have thrown large fireworks into pubs.

In many cases these attacks were carried out by young Asian men. It is generally agreed that in such cases the motivation is a disapproval of alcohol and sometimes a desire to create pub-free areas.

BTUC fights against prejudice and discrimination wherever it occurs. Since the late 1960s we campaigned against the systematic discrimination against Asian people in the workplace and since that time we campaigned racist attacks on black people. Equally we condemn attacks by religious bigots on non-Muslims and on social resources such as pubs.

This like all crime, whether it is committed by white or black people, is wrong.

Over the coming years our region is going to come under pressure if the global economy falters. Only by sticking together and resisting racist nonsense will we have a chance of protecting the local economy. We must not make the mistakes that people in Burnley and Blackburn have done by associating the name of our towns, villages and cities with fascism. Because in the modern economy this is a recipe for decline. It will mean less inward investment and lower house prices.

A vote for the BNP means that the name of Queensbury will be held in contempt in the national media.

BNP THE PARTY OF CONVICTIONS

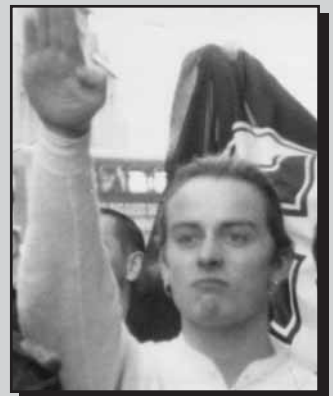

Nick Griffin: Party Leader. Incitement for racial hatred

Tony Lecomber: National Organiser. Bomb-making and having hand-grenades

Andy McLorie: Ulster organiser. Involved in firebombing RUC officer's house

Warren Bennett: Chief steward. Football hooligan

IS THIS THE PARTY FOR YOU?

TOP YORKSHIRE BNP ORGANISER ADMITS HE IS A NAZI

The man who ran the BNP election campaign in Bradford last year has admitted on television to being a nazi sympathiser. Mark Collett, from Leeds, also said that he would prefer to live in Hitler's Germany than in Bradford.

Yet despite his nazi admission, Collett not only remains in the BNP but has since spoken at a Queensbury BNP meeting.

Collett boasted of his support for Hitler's Germany and said that he couldn't understand why British people found pictures of nazi saluting German soldiers distasteful.

These shocking revelations were made in a recent Channel Four documentary on the BNP's youth group. Collett, then leader of the Young BNP, only reinforced the true nazi politics of the BNP leadership.

Even his sister was embarrassed by her Hitler-loving brother. In one scene she ran out of the door for fear of being associated with the BNP.

Collett spoke admiringly of how Hitler was his hero and how he was inspired by images of nazi saluting German soldiers.

"You can call me a nazi sympathiser," he boasted.

Collett also revealed his more sinister and sick side to his nature. "I like to break people," he told the filmmaker. "When you've broken them and sucked that last bit of life out of them. That's it. When people say I am evil, yeah I am."

Last September Collett organised a BNP youth camp in Queensbury. Among those who attended were hardened nazis and violent thugs. One local man was filmed with a swastika tattooed on his hand.

Despite his nazi views Collett remains in the BNP and intends to play a central role in the party's election campaign in Queensbury in May. Only five days after the programme he spoke alongside the BNP leader Nick Griffin at a party rally in Bradford. Rather than admitting his guilt, he merely claimed to be the victim of the media.

His support for Nazi Germany is an insult to all those who fought fascism in World War Two. But this is only to be expected from a party whose leader disgustingly denies that the Holocaust happened.

The BNP claim to be a respectable political alternative but Collett proves it is nothing of the sort.

BNP CANDIDATE LAUGHS AS SMALL BOY DIES IN FIRE

BNP dump sick nazi on Halifax

Everyone knows that the BNP are riddled with thugs, Nazis and criminals, but the selection of Adrian Marsden as their candidate in a council by-election in Halifax is beyond a joke.

Marsden became notorious in 1996 for celebrating the death of a boy in a house fire in Halifax. The five-year-old child had a white mother and an Asian father, and the family were targeted by Marsden and his Nazi pals in a campaign of sickening racist abuse.

In his tatty Nazi newsletter the warped Marsden wrote of the boy's death "2-0" after already gloating about the death of a local man from cancer.

Anyone who knew Marsden was not surprised by his foul behaviour. He was the local organiser of the nazi terror group Combat 18, a gang that takes its name from the initials of Adolf Hitler. He was also a local football hooligan and involved in criminality.

We expect our councillors to help us in our hour of need not laugh at family tragedy. And there is hardly anything worse than the death of a young child. But that's exactly what this BNP candidate has done.

And what does it say about the BNP that they can select someone like this to become a councillor?

Do not give the BNP your support. Do not give support to people like Marsden. Don't forget, it could be your child he is laughing at next.
